Academy students will learn about a variety of mental disorders and other disabilities, visit mental health facilities, and learn the concepts of crisis intervention while adhering to officer safety practice and policy. Recently, the Modesto Police Department joined other progressive law enforcement agencies around the country by establishing a Crisis Intervention Training Program.

- Reduce use-of-force incidents by officers when encountering emotionally disturbed individuals.
- Reduce related injuries to officers and citizens.
- Reduce misdemeanor arrests among the seriously mentally ill population.
- Decrease the frequency and amount of time officers spend responding to calls for service with this population.
- Reduce involuntary psychiatric hospitalizations.
- Learn about a variety of mental disorders and other disabilities.
- Visit mental health facilities.
- Learn the concepts of crisis intervention while adhering to officer safety practice and policy.

- Improve relationships between law enforcement, local behavioral health, other service providers, and consumers of behavioral health services and their families.
